Nine years later it was about 20 miles long from east to west and 15 miles broad from north to south. In still more recent years ccessive dikes had been constructed, the lake had almost dried up, and most of the area formerly covered by it had been brought under cultivation. But the unusual precipitation of 1907 caused the whole central portion of the valley to be inundated, and extended the lake to approximately its old shore line of 1880, almost at the base of the Kettleman Hills. The accompanying topographic map (Pl. I), which was made in the summer of 1007, shows the abnormally high mark reached by the lake at that time. During the late Quaternary period Tulare Lake covered a much greater area than at present, as is shown by the...
