Not illustrated. 1886 edition. Excerpt: .at the price he had offered, from iron. running directly from the blast furnace, there would be a great saving of expense, a saving of something like one-quarter of the cost, which would amount to several hundred thousand dollars for the pipes required. As the municipal authorities finally coincided with me, I made it my business, as fast as the pipes began to arrive, to be very particular that a process of testing the strength of each pipe should be made, to be sure that it was perfect. This was done by closing the ends of each pipe, and then bringing hydraulic pressure to bear, equal to three hundred pounds to every square inch: thus no weak or imperfect pipe was allowed to pass into use. The wisdom of that process of testing has been fully exemplified and continued in practice, so that we...
