Not illustrated. 1851 Excerpt: .he had by somebody--bequeathed his greyhounds to me, with his blessing, and right glad I was to get such dogs. Upon my conscience, Oscar has a chest like a jackass. They are far superior hounds to your mad friend Kingston s. I suppose Madame O Carroll tells you all the news of your paternal abode, so I need say nothing on that subject. Things are going on queerly enough at Ballymore. Bell Trench still holds her ground there. She rode a steeple-chase last Tuesday week with Manus Bodkin, and distanced him. The line was from Ballingearry graveyard to the back gate of Ballymore. They were neck-and-neck as far as the gravelpit, but there Manus s horse stumbled and threw him--Miss Bell hurra d for the fall of her competitor, and came in to the post fair and easy. Certainly, it must be admitted, that no woman alive better becomes a saddle than Isabella Trench, and that is no light praise; yet my admiration for her undeniable merits cannot quite blind me to the want of good taste she displays in remaining the guest of SirH--and Miss Emily, under present circumstances. People, you know, will say all sorts of things. But the queerest of queer doings at Ballymore is, that our worthy knight should tolerate the presence of FitzEustace there. You know I am not very strait-laced in my notions, and have no great pretensions, Heaven help me! to insist on rigid virtue in either layman...
