Not illustrated. 1858 Excerpt: .he has long ceased to seek for his own, and by his presence add tenfold pleasure to their hour of glee. He too can maintain fair play, infuse a spirit of truth and honour into their games of exercise or skill, and hold an unseen helm by which to influence character. Thus he stoops to conquer; he loves his children, and at suitable times and opportunities enters into their feelings, tastes, and pursuits; and his children love him, and at suitable times and opportunities he endeavours to kindle theninterest in his higher and more enduring pleasures, intellectual and spiritual. Christian parents, be not moved by the unhallowed wit of writers and talkers, who select the worst features of mismanaging professors of evangelical religion, and unite them into a portrait at which the world may laugh, and the whole family of God be held up to ridicule. The Lord s day is a special field for exercise of this lying spirit. The youthful group, gladly going forth to public worship, some hastening with loving hearts to teach to others in the Sunday school what they have learned themselves at home; the private hour when many a young spirit communes with God and is still; the happy party intent upon searching out Scripture questions, or developing mental pictures, and the blending of sweet young voices in hymns of praise;--all such sources of pleasure and scenes of happiness are wilfully passed by, and these unjust critics sketch instead some...
